TUCKER CHINA

Believed First American Porcelain

by ELSIE WALKER BUTTERWORTH

TO PHILADELPHIA it is believed goes the honor of producing the first American porcelain to be classified as hard paste china. William Ellis Tucker, with no knowledge of the composition, processes, or experience of any kind, began to experiment with a small kiln which his father, Benjamin Tucker, had built for him in the rear of his property at No. 324 High Street (now called Market) between 9th and 10th Streets, Philadelphia, near the present Post Office building. Benjamin Tucker, the father, had been in the china business as a merchant, and perhaps this was the inducement to the son to try his hand, for he began by decorating white china which his father imported, using the small kiln to fire the finished pieces. His attempts were not too successful and the pieces were crude.

Tucker & Hemphill pitcher circa 1833. Portrait of J. G. Washington.

He then turned to experimenting with various kinds of clay which he found about the city, and finally produced an opaque queensware. By 1825 his experiments had proven so successful that he began to manufacture a hard paste chinaware as a business venture, locating his kilns at the old waterworks at the northwest corner of Schuylkill-Front (23rd) and Chestnut Streets, having obtained the property from the city. He then purchased four acres of land on which a feldspar quarry was situated at New Castle, County, Delaware.

The first articles produced by Tucker, himself, were yellowish in cast and were lacking in finish and artistry. The decorations were done by hand, mostly with landscapes applied by a few strokes of the brush. Transfer or printing on china was not used by Tucker. The models were mostly after the fashion of the English potters of that day. Some undecorated pieces were sold, but these were rough in appearance as the project was still an experiment.

In 1828 his younger brother, Thomas Tucker, and Thomas Hulme of Philadelphia, became associated with him, the latter investing some money in the business and they began to produce suitable pieces of china for market. A marked im-

Collecting Pattern Glass

More Knowledge, Safeguard Against Reproductions

Part IX of a 12-Part Article

by RUTH WEBB LEE

THE increasing number of letters received from reputable antique dealers and collectors throughout the country clearly indicates that the proper place to expose the sordid commerce in misrepresented reproductions is in a place where the expose may be widely read, such as among these pages. Our steady and impartial campaign against the wares and methods used by unscrupulous vendors has brought expressions of praise from benefiting dealers and savage attacks from those whose fraudulent practices have been exposed.

Almost daily, correspondents in various states send me accounts of the dishonest practises in use by these spurious peddlers, aided and abetted by certain glass manufacturers of reproductions. These men, as my readers know, work to a large extent among the smaller antique shops. When they find a dealer who does not know how to distinguish the old from the new, they capitalize on that ignorance and press on him "bargains", for which he pays prices far in excess of those proper for reproductions.

Sometimes, however, fear of the law or awkward repercussions cause these peddlers to play safe by selling frauds for what they are, but craftily suggesting that the wares can be palmed off on unsuspecting customers by saying, "I bought them for old in a private house", or "these are made from the original molds so no one can tell the difference", or a similar equivocal statement. It is most regrettable that lure of illegitimate profit has led many a weak dealer into such dishonesty. The injury done to the trade has been serious. The confidence of the buying public in the integrity of the dealer is too precious and necessary to be tossed away for the dubious lure of fraudulent practices.

I cannot too strongly emphasize the short-sightedness of such a policy. Not only do the misdeeds of a few bring into undeserved disrepute hundreds of honest dealers, but those few who lend themselves to selling spurious pieces as genuine are preparing a boomerang that is bound to leave them with no business reputation, and, eventually, no business. There are those dealers who buy reproductions in good faith because they cannot tell the difference. They must be forgiven but they should study. So must the collectors.

The successful dealer takes pains to know his stock. He insists that whatever he sells be genuine of its kind. If for any reason he wishes to carry in stock a few reproductions, he sells them frankly for what they are. He does not list them as "continuation glass" or any other fancy, but deceptive term. the obvious truth of the old saying: "Honesty is the best policy", he knows there is nothing so unprofitable as selling under false representation. By so doing, he loses the seasoned collector, of course, and the beginner soon cuts his antique eyeteeth and learns to leave him alone. Knowing the genuine, and selling pieces for just what they are, constitute plain common sense. No other course pays.

Illustrated this time are three pieces of Three Face. The one in the center is new and the other two are old. The brilliant floodlights of the photographer's camera bring out details not so apparent by daylight. It will be noted that the old pieces are a gray-white, with a certain amount of sheen in spots. The new are whiter and show no life in the glass. Any of the old faces, when held before a bright light, almost appear to be alive. The old frosted glass is satinsmooth to the touch. Many of the new pieces feel coarse and harsh, though this is not always a sure test because some of the copies are fairly smooth. The details of the face are not quite as sharp in the copies. The nose is a trifle more blunt.

When any of the frosted and clear patterns were originally made they were all clear glass. A bath in "white acid", as the workmen called hydrofluoric acid, gave it the frosted or satin finish. One may readily understand that sometimes a goblet (or any other piece) when plunged in the acid, could sometimes go in to a deeper depth than at another, so if the frosted finish extends up to the bowl of the goblet instead of ending directly over the lady's hair (as in the Three Face pattern) it would have no bearing on the age of the piece.

So far, new Three Face items include the goblets, two styles of champagnes (deep bowl and saucer bowl), sauce dishes, butter dish (6 inch. footed), lamps, and footed sauce dishes.

Lately I have received several inquiries in regard to colored goblets in the Paneled Grape pattern (Plate 64, Early American Pressed Glass). So far I have found no record of this pattern ever having been made in color, except in reproductions. I have seen new goblets in opal, amethyst, bluish-opalescent, and clear glass with the leaves in green and the grapes in red. Lately green ones have also been reported though I have not seen them.

The Strawberry and Currant goblet is another which so far as is known, was never made originally except in clear glass. New ones have been appearing in color, notably in amber or blue, as well as in clear glass. The detail is exceptionally poor in the copy. Plate 151, E.A.P.G.)

Another new goblet has appeared in the form of the Arched Grape. It is also an unusually poor copy as the detail does not even attempt to conform accurately with the old one. (Plate 64, E.A.P.G.) A photograph showing clearly the differences between the old and the new one will appear shortly in The Spinning Wheel.

Pennsylvania Dutch Barn, vicinity of Lancaster, Penna. showing "Hex Signs".

PENNSYLVANIA DUTCH AND OTHER PRIMITIVES

Part I — History & Background

by ALICE WILT STRAUSS

The author, a frequent contributor to THE SPINNING WHEEL, may be remembered best perhaps from her last series which appeared in this magazine in the fall of 1948—"You Can Be Sure It's Old". In ensuing chapters of "Pennsylvania Dutch & Other Primitives" beginning below, Mrs. Strauss expects to include timely texts on the ever popular — Tinware, Wooden Ware, Dower Chests, Dough Trays, Toys, etc., so representative of the Penna. Dutch Country.

OF THE many different types and styles of antiques sought by the collector, I believe it is safe to say no one kind has enjoyed the increase in popularity as much as the primitives, especially those of the Pennsylvania Dutch. Perhaps this is because the trend today is toward simpler living — perhaps because primitives adapt themselves so readily to suburban living. Whatever the reason, the fact remains that Pennsylvania Dutch antiques have attained a recognition and evaluation never dreamed of by the simple folk from whose homes they came.

In order better to appreciate these Pennsylvania Dutch antiques the collector would do well to know something about the history of the people themselves. Not only would this knowledge increase his interest in his "finds" but it would aid him in his selection, and in the detection of the genuine from the fraud.

Environment and background affect man's life and this early influence on those early settlers who emigrated from the Rhineland in 1683, shows clearly in their furniture, their colorful decorations, and in their mode of living.

It was around this time that England, France, Spain, Holland and even Sweden were sending groups of their people to America to establish colonies in the new country. This was not the case with Germany. These people, now known as Pennsylvania Dutch, were not sent over as colonists by the mother country. They came voluntarily, seeking a land of religious freedom—a life free from oppression, much as did the Puritans or Pilgrim fathers who came to this country in 1620.

Like the Puritans, the German emigrants had their own ship, the "Concord" which sometimes is referred to as the "Mayflower of the Pennsylvania Germans". The Concord sailed on July 24, 1683, with a small group of Germans, and Dutch Mennonites, from Crefeld and Kriegsheim, in Germany, and landed on October 6, at Philadelphia, then a community of less than a hundred dwellings. This was the beginning of the settlement by the Germans, the Dutch Mennonites and later the Swiss Mennonites of that large fertile section of the State, north and west of Philadelphia, which since has become known as the land of the Pennsylvania Dutch.

These people primarily were farmers. Their land was cleared and their houses and barns were constructed from the timber and stone at hand. Greater thought and effort were put into the building of large barns than in the construction of a permanent home, and these large

"Swisser" barns, as they are called, even today add a picturesque touch to the landscape of the Pennsylvania Dutch country.

The first barns were built of logs, then later of stone and timber, with the second story or loft projecting eight to ten feet over the lower, thus sheltering the entry to the stables. The love for color and decoration which so characterizes these simple folk is seen not only in their furniture, but also in the designs with which they "dressed up" their barns. The true meaning of these "Hex signs", as the designs are called, is a controversial subject today. There are some who contend that these signs were painted on the buildings to scare away the witches or evil spirits. Others scoff at this suggestion that the people were superstitious and claim it was only the love of artistic decoration that prompted the farmer decorate his barn for that building was considered the most important on his farm.

From still another source comes the story that these barn signs were a method of communication. Farms were far apart and news traveled slowly in the early days. Thus when a farmer had cleared all the debts on his farm he communicated this to his neighbors by painting a certain geometric design on his barn, which was understood by them. Or a different design indicated that in his household was a daughter of marriageable age. This latter interpretation of the designs on Pennsylvania Dutch barns was passed along to me by a woman of Pennsylvania Dutch heritage, who was born and raised a short distance from Easton. She was not able to substantiate her story except to say it had been the explanation given her as a child. I have been unable to verify either her story or the other two mentioned, so conjecture of the purpose of these decorations is still the case. Whatever prompted this custom, these colorful structures are an interesting part of the lovely Pennsylvania countryside and are unique in that they are found nowhere else in the United States, to the best of my knowledge.

The earliest furniture of the people who came here in 1683 was of the simplest construction possible. It was crude, utilitarian, and undecorated. The farmers were busy clearing their land and settling themselves in a new country, and the furniture in their homes consisted of the barest necessities. As time went on and there was not the pressing need of establishing a home, these early pieces were discarded and replaced with furniture of better line. It is this furniture, which was made in the period from the late 1700's to around the middle of the nineteenth century, that is considered the typical Pennsylvania Dutch, and is sought by collectors today.

Mahogany, which was a favorite wood among the fine cabinet makers, was not available to the Pennsylvania Dutch farmer who had to make his own furniture. He had to use the wood at hand and so for his finer piece he substituted walnut and cherry, and for the commoner pieces, pine, poplar and chestnut, and it is the pieces made of this softer wood that usually were decorated. However, the collector seeking the true Pennsylvania Dutch primitives should bear in mind that the purely utilitarian pieces, which were also made from the softer woods, rarely were decorated. The dry sink, dough tray or dough box, the punched tin food safe are some of the pieces which usually were left in their natural state, while the benches, chairs, some of the cupboards and beds, are among those most frequently painted. Some of the cupboards, chests of drawers, and other better pieces were made of the finer woods and finished in the natural wood finish and were combined with the lovely bird's eye maple and tiger maple found on the land.

In the articles to follow I will try to go into more detail regarding the different pieces of the Pennsylvania Dutch, and hope they will serve the collector as a guide in his search for the Pennsylvania primitives.

Miniature lamp collection of Mrs. Paul Sigler of Knightstown, Indiana. Except for the foreground lamps, which were set on the table for photographic composition, the lamps are shown in their permanent positions—across the mantel under an oil painting by Mrs. Sigler—and on narrow shelves on each side of the fireplace. Each lamp is kept filled with oil and each wick is trimmed, ready for instant lighting. Mrs. Sigler uses lamps in lieu of candles in her windows at Christmas, and on her dining table, varying her choice of lamp to harmonize with the china she selects. At a dinner party for twelve, she once set before each place a miniature lamp—alight and glowing.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE PRACTICAL SIDE OF COLLECTING

ANTIQUERS are the most ingenious people in the world. They not only can make something out of nothing, but anything out of anything.

The winter friends who visit our small shop in Florida come from 47 states, Canada, China, Cuba and points east and west, and we get to know a lot about antique collecting in different sections. Kentuckians, if we can generalize, go for silver; most Detroiters like violets; Chicagoans collect ironstone; Texans, cut glass; and just now Ohioans are all out for tole trays. We also get to know a lot about what people all over the country do with their antiques, and how they display their collections. They are always putting ideas in our head, which go out one ear into a notebook.

For example, a Minnesota woman collects needlework pictures, definitely a luxury item. She uses scenes, figures, occasionally an animal, no florals, no mottoes. These in varying sizes and frames, are hung from ceiling to floor, around the wide archway between her dining and living room.

On the inexpensive, yet effective side, a Buck's County originator puts a very fine petit point (She first used a discarded evening bag) into the picture side of ordinary broken-down daguerrotpe cases (the kind you're tempted to throw away,) and hangs them as a group, or gives them as presents either singly or in pairs. She also used petit point from an old compact case, which she said, was exactly the right size.

Another Pennsylvanian, in search of a pine mirror, peeled the rest of the half-gone veneer from an ogee mirror, and refinished it in its natural soft wood. She fixed up another in a light and dark combination by taking the veneer from the inside rim only, and had "just what she'd been looking for" to go in a room combining light and dark furniture.

And what hasn't been done to make a lamp where no light was before! A Detroit woman set two cut glass tumblers one on top of the other, had them fastened together with a half inch silver band, mounted and wired for elegant and different boudoir lamps. It worked so well, she wired the pitcher for her bedside table, using silver plated, not brass, fixtures.

In New Hampshire a clever woman used a polished brass bugle as a lamp base and the bright plaid shade was edged (Oh, grandma!) with knitted red woolen petticoat lace. On provement took place and the decorations began to be of sprays of flowers, roses, birds and some little of the gold decoration. These pieces were usually marked Tucker and Hulme, although some pieces have been identified without any marking whatever. The Philadelphia Art Museum owns a piece decorated with gold bands and the initials CB for Charles Burd, which bears the name Tucker and Hulme, 1828, in red. This partnership lasted about a year.

In an article written by Thomas Tucker on the subject of Tucker China, he tells about the difficulty experienced with a workman who sought to destroy the pieces in the firing processes. This man was apparently in the employ of competitors from abroad.

In 1832 William Ellis Tucker died and the business passed into the hands of Judge Joseph Hemphill of Philadelphia, who had previously become a partner in the business, with Thomas Tucker continuing as superintendent. Judge Hemphill had made a trip to Europe where he visited the great porcelain factories. As a result, artisans were brought from France, England and Germany, and a more elaborate kind of chinaware was now being produced, using the sepia landscapes in combination with gold decoration. Well-to-do families placed orders for dinner services decorated with initials, names, monograms and armorial shields, usually combined with floral decorations. Festoons of lovely flowers, roses, tulips and forget-me-nots were used, and some of the vases were copies of Sevres with portraits of prominent persons. A coffee or chocolate set which belonged to Betsy Patterson who married Jerome Bonaparte is in the Historical Society of Maryland, probably acquired by her while she resided in Philadelphia for a time. It bears the name of Tucker and Hemphill.

Judge Hemphill retired from the business about 1837 and the factory was leased by Thomas Tucker, who continued the business for about a year until he had manufactured enough china to stock a store on Chestnut Street above 7th. Then he discontinued the manufacture of chinaware and went into the importing business, bringing china from Europe.

Tucker China of the later period resembles the French porcelain very much and was modeled after French patterns, with the exception that the Tucker china has a more bluish cast as contrasted with the pure white of the French.

The Art Museum of Philadelphia owns a very fine collection of Tucker China and the author is indebted to them for the use of illustrations shown with this article, together with much of the factual material.

150 year old English chatelaine, owned by Mrs. John Goldsmith.

Pair carved pearl earrings.

ANTIQUE JEWELRY

THE DINGLE - DANGLES

PART VII

by ADA W. DARLING

PROBABLY there never has been a time since jewelry was first made that some form of it has not hung, suspended from various parts of our anatomy, to dangle gaily and sometimes noisily.

Centuries ago, Roman brides were given chatelaines carrying the keys to their new homes, a symbol of their authority in their husband's house.

Chatelaines which we can collect today are varied and most interesting,—also useful. The larger one which I have illustrated is especially lovely, with its intricate design of Cupids holding up vines of grapes and leaves. Suspended by chains of varying lengths are a pencil, scissors in a highly embossed case and, from the central, extra-long chain, is a memorandum case with ivory leaves inside tortoise shell covers beautifully overlaid with a design of silver. The small box was intended for wax matches and there is a tiny scratcher on the bottom. A silver pen knife completes the ensemble. This chatelaine is 150 years old and was brought from Scotland by Mrs. Goldsmith's grandfather, Dr. Wilson Dods, from whom she inherited it. Each piece is English hall-marked.

The design of the second chatelaine (see cut) is entirely different and, to me, not quite understandable. Certainly the designer was a Nature student. On the crescent-shaped top piece, we find a toad, a heron, a swan, some lilies, and a fish, all in high relief. The first chain carries a pin holder, the purple velvet held between two silver plates each with the picture of a rakish looking gentleman with handlebar moustache and flowing beard,—sort of a pirate-fisherman. Little glass-headed pins in assorted colors are still in the velvet. Next is the memorandum pad; the inside leaves are missing, but there is a handsome spray of flowers on the front applied over a fish-scale background. The central chain holds the patch, or powder box. This is a more conventional piece with no livestock included. The little flask again reverts to Nature, with a butterfly on one side and a turtle on the other. Last, but not least, is the dog whistle, with three grave-looking spaniels. And it really whistles, shill and clear. This chatelaine, too, is made of silver, but there are no identifying marks.

There have been bangle bracelets of every sort and description. Some were stiff silver and gold bands and there were others made with chains. Bangles made from gold money were popular at one time and the bracelet pictured has several gold dollars and a gold nugget brought from the Klondike on it. The initial piece next to the nugget is silver with raised gold letters on each side. This was an "engagement" piece, made many years ago, with the initials of the engaged couple. It was worn first on a pin and later put on the bracelet. Gold hearts, a tiny gold urn and a ball with colored enamel flowers add interest to the bracelet, which is dear to me because I inherited it from a relative.

Earrings always dangled, more or less. The ones I have shown are of the "more" variety. These really are lovely for they are made of the finest pearl, with soft colors reflected through them.

There were brooches with dangles, big and little, made of metals, onyx, pearls, and gem stones. One wonders if the old goldsmiths, with their crude tools, had any idea that the jewelry they constructed so laboriously and carefully would be so treasured and appreciated as it is today.

AMERICAN GLASS BOOKS

The past 18 years have made the following titles the best known reference books on the subject of early American glass.

THE LATEST

AMERICAN GLASS CUP PLATES by Ruth Webb Lee and James H. Rose. The first fully illustrated historical and technical treatise on the subject. Comprehensive information on all known cup plates. 450 pages, 132 full page illustrations. No expense spared to make this the final book on the subject. First edition sold out prior to publication. Second edition now ready. . . $10.00

The standard reference books on early American glass and the only complete volumes devoted to their respective subjects.

EARLY AMERICAN PRESSED GLASS. Revised and enlarged 1946. The pioneer book, copiously illustrating, classifying and discussing the nearly 300 earliest patterns of pressed tableware collectible in sets. 26th edition $10.00

SANDWICH GLASS. Revised and enlarged 1947. Authoritative history based on factory records, illustrated with all types of Sandwich glass, completely covering the beautiful lacy pieces. Seventh edition. $10.00

VICTORIAN GLASS. Specialties of the 19th century including pattern glass, hats, slippers, vases, etc. Seventh edition . . $10.00

New printings of all Handbook titles now on coated paper, not available during the war. The indispensable pocket guides for identifying patterns.

HANDBOOK OF EARLY AMERICAN PRESSED GLASS PATTERNS. Fifteenth printing. All the illustrations from the large volume, plus index. 205 pages. $2.50

VICTORIAN GLASS HANDBOOK. All of the illustrations in the large book, with index. 275 pages. $2.50

SANDWICH GLASS HANDBOOK. All of the illustrations in the large volume, together with list of Sandwich pattern glass and index. The handsome illustrations of the lacy glass alone are worth the price of this book. 230 pages. $2.50

ANTIQUE FAKES AND REPRODUCTIONS in a revised and greatly enlarged up-to-date edition will be available later this year.

Ruth Webb Lee's "PRICE GUIDE TO PATTERN GLASS" covering all the tableware in "EARLY AMERICAN PRESSED GLASS" will be available in June $4.00

HALF-PRICE SALE! FIRST TIME OFFERED!

War paper editions of all three Handbook titles. For those who can use these books, which have approximately ten to fifteen blurred pages due to uneven finish of paper, they are available at $1.25 each. The author has absorbed many thousands of dollars loss on these books. There is so much good in them that she is making them available for those who can use them, rather than turn them back for credit.

18th Century Farmhouse

825 HAMMOND'S LANE, BALTIMORE 25, MD. 1 mi. off Ritchie Hwy. on Rts. 301 and 2 (Alternate). At second stop light below city line enroute to Annapolis and Washington.

SUNNYFIELDS — ANTIQUES takes great pleasure in announcing a series of lecture-teas to be given in our garden, monthly, during the summer. Our speaker will be Mrs. Frederick Leiter of Sparks, Maryland, a collector for 38 years, and a renowned authority on antiques. Her personal collections of lustre sandwich glass and historical Staffordshire are internationally known. Her popularity as a speaker is widespread, and her examples of antiques which she always presents to augment her remarks as a part of her lectures, are comparable to a guided tour through a museum, only much more stimulating and scintillating.

In presenting this series, Sunnyfields is well aware of establishing a precedent and an innovation. This feature has come about through the belief of the owner of Sunnyfields that more and more people love antiques, but because of their limited knowledge, fear to be "taken in" by unscrupulous dealers, or by dealers who are as ignorant of the true values of their wares as are many of their customers. We are abiding by an early American maxim that "in knowledge is truth, and in truth is confidence".

We are further happy to announce that as a guest of honor, along with Mrs. Leiter, will be Mrs. Marjorie Smith of Taneytown, Maryland, owner and editor of The Spinning Wheel magazine, who will preside at the tea table. Mrs. Smith has done much, through her magazine, to establish and maintain fair dealings in "the trade", and should be commended.

These lecture-teas will be given monthly on the FOURTH Wednesday afternoon at Sunnyfields, beginning on May 25th, at 2 P.M. Due to the fact that only a limited number of persons can be accommodated, reservations MUST be made in advance, and NO reservations will be accepted after May 22nd. If you have friends who wish to come, please request additional tickets, but include their names and addresses with your request. All tickets must be purchased in advance. No ticket refunds for cancellations will be given after May 22nd. No reservations for later lectures will be accepted until the conclusion of the first.

LECTURE AGENDA — Mrs. Leiter

BUTTONS BUTTONS - -

Part III

Picture and Story Types

by Dot 'n Dick Clark

WE HAVE done a little generalizing in our last two columns on what goes into making a buttonologist, what he collects and the pleasure he gets from collecting the not so lowly button. Now lets get right into collecting for ourselves. What is more necessary to the button collector than buttons? We must have them. Lets make a raid on the sewing box first—or the sewing machine drawers. Who was that childhood playmate whose mother used to trot out a box of buttons for rainy day amusement—maybe she still has them. Or, try the elderly seamstress who let out the hems on all your perfectly good skirts when the New-Look invaded the nation. Maybe you don't wear skirts or have seamstresses. Maybe you wear trousers and have a tailor. Try him for buttons—he too has an old box hidden away which may contain some very surprising items such as old uniform or military buttons. Try the old reasoning system—if you were an old button, where would you be hiding now. Anyway, by one means or another (preferably legal) we have obtained a quantity of buttons. Now lets put up the card table, or a large serving tray will do nicely, and pour all our findings out in a glittering, kaleidoscope array. Supposing that our first forray has netted us about five hundred buttons. We will be lucky if one hundred of these are worthy of more than the most fleeting attention, so lets start with a process of elimination. Since early in the twentieth century button making has been on a mass production basis. New materials have been developed, and new methods of handling the old materials have been used so that millions of flashy and attractive buttons have been made cheaply for use on ready-made garments. So lets sort out all of the modern plastics and, if they are not moulded in the shape of a fruit, vegetable, a recognizable everyday article, an animal, a nut, or a comic person (these are 'goofies', remember?) lets admire them briefly for their color and form and discard them into the 'junk' pile. But please do not take us too seriously when we say to discard a button. If a button gives you pleasure because of its color or design it belongs in your collection. Now with the remainder of our original pile, for the number has been considerably reduced, lets sort out the first general button classification—pictures and stories. A picture button is one that depicts a scene, a bust or figure of a human or an animal, or a still-life such as flowers or fruit if the treatment of this subject is not stylized to the point of becoming merely a design. A story button may be a scene of one or more figures of people and animals that are performing some action or have adapted a pose that associates them with a story. This story might be biblical, legendary, historical, operatic, or mythical. Or it might even be commemorative as in the Teddy Roosevelt buttons where he is depicted shooting a lion, meeting rhinos, riding elephants and other hair raising events. The photograph of the little rotund figure with the handle-bar mustachios placidly sitting in the tavern door is as yet a picture button, but this could become a story if the research of some collector could identify the happy fellow. Now lets work on the other photo—that of the nude figure and lion. What does this subject bring to mind—and here a reading or magnifying glass comes in handy. He could be a Roman gladiator—but then he would be nameless, and there would be no fun in that. Samson? Perhaps, but not good enough. Where is the long hair from which his strength sprang? Who was the other strong man—Hercules—that's it. And so the encyclopedia does the rest for us and tells of the Twelve Labors of Hercules—number one being the destruction of a blood thirsty lion which had made its lair in the Nemean Forest. "Boldly entering the den of the monster, he grasped it by the throat and strangled it to death, after which he made for himself a coat of its shaggy skin," says one encyclopedia. "What a man," say the Clarks. Here we see the transformation of a picture button into a story button, and enjoy the thrill of achievement. We can name this button 'The First Labor of Hercules' and have that title adopted by the button collecting world because we have done the spade work on this subject.

The buttons pictured are two piece

BRIDAL WREATH and BOUQUETS

The small wreaths of orange-blossom and myrtle flowers adorning the veil of the young bride at her church wedding was kept a souvenir in olden days. Either formally displayed under a glass bell on the mantle, on a silken etui in the parlor vitrine, or merely hung on the top left corner of the large mirror in the bride's bedroom, the little flower wreath wilted dry, browned, remained for years to come.

We remember having seen in old Europe quite a few bridal souvenir-wreaths hung on the poster of empire standing mirrors and Victorian "swinging" mirrors.

Wedding and engaement bouquets of old, their flowers mounted on thin wire, dried in their white silk-covered circular cardboard "manchettes". These fancy holders were decorated in fine workmanship with pleated white silk, lace ruffles, and tulle, of which rosettes were sewn to the "manchette" with tiny ornamental white silk buttons. The two formal bouquets with their ribbons were usually kept in two tall urn-like vases atop a console-table at the wall, reflected in the hanging console-mirror.

CARTOGRAPHY COLLECTOR

Governor of the nation's seventh ranking state in population, Michigan's 37 year old chief executive, Bible quoting, informality loving, six foot two, athletic G. Mennen Williams cherishes a noble hobby. Governor Williams collects old navigation maps. Residing in Lansing, Michigan, his study is lined with interesting and valuable old maps.

Cartography collections, old maps are kept in the archives of every capital on this globe. The world's largest collection of old maps is in Sweden. Located in a special government building in Sweden's capital, Stockholm, this collection contains more than 700,000 maps, dating back to 1628.

Earliest map known in the world is a clay-tablet dating from about 2500 B. C. It is thought to represent northern Syria,—two mountain ranges, three cities, and a sea in the north. This tablet, discovered in the winter of 1930-31 by the Harvard-Bagdad School Expedition, is kept at the Semitic Museum of Harvard University.

Old maps blend in well with antique furniture and cover much blank wall-space at little cost. Lending a pleasantly sophisticated touch to the premises, as well as being "real", old maps are preferred to poor pictures and reproductions.

A few old maps may easily be found in every antiques shop, also in book-stores, attics, and auctions. Chosen with some reference to the family history, old continental maps, Early American land-charts, maps representing the state or section of the country where forebears of the family one time lived, soon became beloved possessions in the antiques minded descendants' home.

Maps when very large are never a problem to display. A noted writer had the map of old Paris, France, affixed to the ceiling of his bedroom, it covered the entire ceiling.

"On sleepless nights," he said, "I gaze at this map, the streets on which once I, too, have passed. I remember buildings, people I have met, my travels. This keeps my mind from wrestling uselessly with unpleasant actualities of the daily grind. Calmed, soon I slumber."

THE FELLOWS WITH THE WIRES

In Europe late in the spring, when snow waters had run down the ravines, in the Karpathian mountains a familiar figure of the past century, the Fellow with the Wires dusted off his simple tools, small strong pliers, coil of wire and rustic staff. Itinerant mender of all broken crockery, porcelain as well as glass, he prepared for his yearly trip.

For footwear he greased a pair of leather-wraps fastened with thongs to the leg, padded his legs with coarse woolen gaiter-straps thick enough to thwart a dog-bite. He donned his homespun linen shirt, embroidered leather vest, leather breeches, typical large-brim felt hat, and kerchief for a shawl. Another kerchief held his food,—cheese, black bread, and salt were ever present in this important bundle. His wide belt held a small knife, the pliers, legal papers. Two coils of thin wire thrown on his back, he set out for his journey on foot.

Wandering, these Karpathian fellows wired broken pottery for a living. Each fellow kept away from the route of the other. He roamed his vague route all over Europe, until the fall burl reminded him winter was coming. It was time to return to the mountains, his hearth, wife and children.

Walking from village to village and small towns, he remained active until around the first world war, when cement mending and the cheapness of factory-made crockery put him out of trade.

In the bygone century, porcelain, earthenware, and glass were considered valuable by the housewife of Europe. She kept all shreds awaiting the Fellow with the Wires. Polite he was and smiling, he never knocked on doors but sang his tune in tenor: "I wire broken dishes—give me bowl and jugs to wi-i-i-r-e-e-".

Whenever a house door opened and the housewife signaled there is pottery to mend, he approached and was given the sherds for estimate as to price and possibility. Coarse dark earthenware was to be mended with iron, finer porcelain and glass with brass, which, of course, rated higher. When the price of the work was agreed upon and it was ascertained that all pieces of the broken item are present, the fellow sat on the ground stretching his weary legs, arranged the sherds and the mending operation began.

With deft fingers he assembled the broken bowl into form, threw a thin wire around the brim, fastened it by twisting it finely with the little pliers and proceeded adding the sherds toward the bottom, or, according to the case, the operation was reversed.

The man wired the broken dish or glass pitcher on the outside tightly, like into a cage. It became as good as new, not a drop of water could trickle through. There were housewives who had their brand new bowls wired in precaution. The fellow gladly strung his wires around such a new bowl, considering the order a compliment to the necessity of his profession.

There was certain pride in him when he handed over his finished work, the well wired pottery. Paid, he promised to return next year, and he did, unless death caught up with him.

Whenever you find such a wired item in an antiques shop, do not shun the piece, think of the itinerant mender who assembled it, now that the art is practically extinct.

Fashion Plate For June 1842

Godey's -"Vogue" of Yesteryear

Part III

Review of May & June 1842 Godey's Lady's Book
Charles Dickens Visit to America Disclosed.

by RUTH GIST PICKENS

LIE back in the hammock, comfortable among my cushions, as once again I browse through the pages that great-grandmother read. The hammock rocks back and forth as I lose myself among the stories and poems of a bygone day. I love to look at the fashion plates and read the descriptions of their intricate design. How grandmother made all those frills and furbulows entirely by hand will have me forever dumbfounded.

In the front there are two engravings by A. L. Dick titled, "Family Devotion-Morning." Under the title are these words from the Bible, "My voice shalt thou hear in the morning, Oh Lord, In the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up." The other engraving is titled, "Family Devotion-Evening." These words from the Bible are beneath the title, "Let my prayer be set forth before thee as incense! and the lifting up of my hands as the evening sacrifice." Psalm CXLI 2nd verse. There are two poems by Mrs. Hale about these plates. They are titled "Morning" and "Evening", under a main title, "Family Devotion."

I find an article titled, "Popular Prejudice" by Mrs. S. E. Farley. In this article she tells of the superstitions of the people in 1842. She writes, "I will confine my observation to my immediate neighborhood, briefly stating a few points of the law of credulity, which governs the minds of our people."

"The most inveterate cases of scofula, which have resisted all other applications, vanish at the touch of a seventh son; and hardy indeed would be the one who should deny his healing virtues."

"My neighbor on the right is a firm believer in 'apparitions' as she calls them, having had guests of that description on several occasions, of whose supernatural powers she gives a marvelous account. This woman has a son with an unfortunate obliquity of vision, occassioned as she thinks, by a fall upon the right side of his head, when the child was but a few weeks old. I never meet her that she does not lament her want of courage in not giving "Our Benny" a tremendous blow on the left side of his head, "to fix his eyes right again". She says she has tried it time and time again but could never hit hard enough. Poor Benny!

"The commencement of any business venture or journey upon Friday is considered extremely hazardous. The skin of a black cat, whose sombre surface was never insulated by any hair of lighter character, is a remedy of sovereign virtue for sore throat, croup, etc.; while the blood of a black hen whose veritable history would declare her guiltless, from the egg, of any other coloured feather, will cure shingles, rheumatism, or anything else."

"The howling of a dog before the door or window of a sick person is a sure 'forerunner' of Dissolution; and a ringing sound in the head, is always a 'death-bell for somebody'.

Well, grandmother, times have not improved too well! Even in this day I know some people who believe in those old superstitions. Not all of them of course. My aunt Susie always butchered "in the moon". My father always said, "Nurts, Susan, I butcher on earth."

There are two very nice prints in the front this month. One is titled, "The Village Amanuensis", and the other, "A Harvest Scene". Of course a beautiful fashion plate is in this issue also. There is a story about the first, a poem about the second, and a description of the fashion plate.

The article that interests me most is titled, "Letter From Under The Bridge", by N. P. Willis. Willis uses a letter as the means to comment on the news of the day. This is the first news report in the issues so far for the year 1842, and what news! Who do you think is in our country? Charles Dickens! It apparently was this commentator's job to interview the Dickenses, which he goes on to do in this manner: "Boz has commenced the harvest of his laurels, but I wish he could suddenly drop his cognito and see the country under some other name.* Dickens might leave us with a sense deeper and sweeter of our love for his genius, than he is likely to gather with the vexed brains and morning headaches of his ovation. Everybody knows him. Everybody loves him. And, faith! I don't see why he should be much pitied after all! A man might bear such popularity as his, whatever "questionable shape" it could assume. At his age to "put a girdle round the earth" as broad as the language in which he writes, and following it three thousand miles West, to find it embroidered with a great nation in alto relievo,—(raised to meet him)—this is a life-time renown to make Milton stare back over the walls of Paradise—to make Dante swear by his own inferno that he was born six centuries too soon. It is Charles Dickens' due, no doubt, and the payment of these airy dues, prompt and honest as it is, would come with better grace if a percentage on the vast sale of his works were not also Charles Dickens' due! * * * * We are a famous nation for paying compliments! I wish to God we were not as famous for robbing authors and breaking faith with capitalists!" Well, that is news! A capitalist once upon a time, at least, got a little sympathy. I couldn't resist remarking on that! On with Mr. Willis.

"You are to understand this line of stars, as expressing a domestic eclipse of three weeks, during which I have made my apparition in most of our principal cities, seen the 'Boz-ball', and aired my holiday clothes and my holiday manners. It was partly business that took me off so suddenly, and partly Boz-iness, I am free to confess. I wished to see this most loveable of authors wearing his bays, and I felt my heart with the country-discreet or indiscreet in its rush to do him honour. * * * * He seemed, himself in all honesty of feeling, delighted with his reception, sans arriere pensee, if I may be-French you a little. It was an anomaly to see a Dives in literature —a man of great genius receiving his "good things in this life", and it was an anomaly to see a man of deep thoughts wearing "his heart on his sleeve", like a merry schoolboy. He reflected every body's smile,—as gaily unembarrassed among the loving looks and bright eyes as a bird in a garden. There was a delicate line to hit, between reserve and condescension, between embarrassment and insensibility—a difficult part to play altogether—and Boz was made for it. He is what Balzac calls unexpansif—with good humor enough, and address, and spirit, sufficiently prompt and mercurial, to spread himself over as much of the world as can get near him bodily. "Popular" is a misused word, but, in its best sense, Dickens is popular—popular in his boots as in his books, the right mind for the people and the right man for the people,—rind and core of the same clear ripeness and sweetness. * * * * He is exempt from the disenchantment common and fatal to most "idols taking a walk".

"Mrs. Dickens seemed to me a woman worthy to count her hours by Master Humphrey's clock—appreciative, to the extremest nerve, of her husband's genius, and feeling with exquisite sensibility, the virtuous quality and prodigal overflowing of his fame. They have four children. Dickens showed me a delicious drawing of them by his friend Maclise, with Gip the raven perched gravely on the back of the chair in which the youngest was seated. Separation from these seems to be the only alloy in their pleasure among us, and I fear they will be drawn home sooner than otherwise best by this powerful chain. God give them a happy reunion!"

About fashions Willis says there is only one "new wrinkle". Ears have been put out of fashion supposedly by some one with ugly ears. Anyway, a pretty woman is pretty no matter how dressed.

"Description of Fashion Plate"

"Fig 1. Muslin dress high in the neck: inserting is introduced into the waist in three rows, producing a very pretty effect. Small bishop sleeves. The cap at the top of the sleeve furnished with an inserting and worked edge coloured sash. Rice straw bonnet.

Fig. 2. Walking dress of material suitable to the season. The corsage is made high in the neck and finished with edging. Tight sleeve, with a seam. Skirt with two rows of worked trimming on each side—(see plate). Thin crape bonnet trimmed with lace.

Fig. 3. Plain muslin dress.

Fig. 4. Summer dress of white muslin. Corsage high in the neck, and open to the waist. Chemisette of needle work moderately high. Skirt trimmed with folds of same material as the dress, put on full. Our plate shows that it requires three to be fashionable."

IMPORTANT!

In an effort to resume the regular speed with which THE SPINNING WHEEL formerly went to press, all advertisers were requested by special letter last month to have their advertising copy to us no later than April 25th for this June issue. Unfortunately a large percentage of copy was not included this month because it did not reach us until after the press forms had closed; however, our readers will note that this speed of going to press (immediately following deadline) has enabled us to fulfill a 3-day earlier publication date. This was made possible by the final closing of all forms on the 25th of the month. This practice will be observed from now on each month—no advertising copy will be accepted for the current month's issue unless it is in our offices by the 25th.

Buttons, Buttons

metal with wire shank. Metal buttons are so described. The face or front carrying the pressed design is one piece, and the back to which the shank is attached makes the second. A metal button might be three piece if the front and back were held together by a separate rim or metal band. Technically we should add one piece to these descriptions—the shank, but this is seldom done with the exception of military buttons.

Not all picture and story buttons are of metal. We find them in black glass (sometimes erroneously called 'jet'), porcelain, mother of pearl and enamel—and if you find one in enamel give three rousing cheers as they are rare. The vogue for these buttons started in the mid 1700's and continued to the late 1800's. The hep-cat (tom, that is) who could enter Louis XVI's private rug-cutting salon with fancier buttons on his doublet was the better dressed lad, while the hep-tabby of that day had to be satisfied in a cautious sort of way with many pins to hold her flowing garments in place.

Numismatists and philatelists claim that they can read the history of a country in its coins and stamps —the battles, the political campaigns and the famous people. Buttonologists can read even further than this. They can tell of the music, the art, the humor and the recreations of a people, which after all is the human side of history.

And so with this note of buttonosophy — 'bye now until next month.

Since nothing has been copied in the Arched Grape except the goblets, and the new ones are easily spotted, this pattern is suggested as a pleasant one to collect. Prices are moderate and the design lends itself nicely for a most attractive table-setting. For those whose purses will permit higher prices, Magnet and Grape with frosted leaf may be counted as one of the most charming in flint glass. It is not found too readily but then, the lure of the chase is enjoyed by many! The simple Grape Band pattern (Plate 64, E.A.P.G.) is not an expensive glass and has in its favor sufficient age to be good and pleasant forms, such as the footed creamer with applied handle. For those who seek only old goblets to combine with their china sets, the Grape with Thumbprint (Plate 164, No. 4) may be highly recommended.

This is last minute news for collectors of Hobnail. As this issue goes to press, I have seen new blue Hobnail salt and pepper shakers that are excellent copies. The company states these may be had in blue, crystal, and milk-white. In dozen lots, they are sold at eighty cents a pair!

Any articles or books signed Ruth Webb or Ruth W. Lee are not by Ruth Webb Lee, whose name always appears in full on her works. Ruth Webb Lee is the author of several books devoted to early American glass.

At Random Observations—

a tall china stem base, she used a most dainty shade—the kind you'd call darling if it hadn't such a sophisticated air. It was of white paper or parchment with paste-ons of bright old valentines or calling cards, roses and ribbons, doves and hands, the whole covered with fine black net, ruffled edges of the net, and a narrow pink velvet band and bow at the top. She was a talented gal, that one.

My next door dealer is clever with jewelry fads. She had a sweet old sterling child's thimble halved and mounted on silver for unusual earrings. Remember those heavy silver-like chains that draped around Knight Templar uniforms and clanked on sword belts. She cut them into bracelet lengths, added a hook arrangement for fastening and had the whole resilvered. They made heavy, charming, and really different bracelets. Also in her shop, a darling bisque bonnet doll in pink taffeta, peers wistfully through the glass of a wooden clock case, minus works, with the inside papered with a scrap of old French wall paper. She says a schoolteacher from Tennessee suggested that one.

A Brooklyn woman has brass or silver bases made for those gorgeous old gas shades no one knows quite what to do with. A stunning pair of Tiffany shades made up with sterling bases became beautiful bowls.

On the other hand, a Florida friend turned a lovely crimped pink overlay shallow bowl upside down and made a lamp shade!

But best of all, I loved the idea of a big old ironstone wash bowl set on a garden wall for a bird bath. The mocking birds and cardinals love it, too — by MARCIA RAY.

broken porcelain took it to the "mender". Repair by cement was not habitual, common glue did not hold the pieces. The mender, too, used wire, only his method was different. Tiny holes were bored into the porcelain at the edges of the breakage which was glued, then the pieces clinched together with wire clamps. Part of the mender's skill was that the porcelain was not pierced through. It took much patience to do the work.

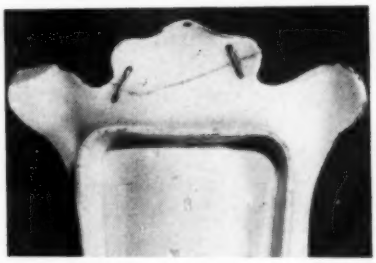
It is pleasant to have all perfect pieces in a collection, but crockery and hearts do break once a while and it might be cruel to refuse a lovable old item because it is mended.

Compare the front view with the back of this mended antique porcelain. Note the porcelain was not pierced through when the tiny holes to hold the clamps were bored. This is clearly shown by the position of the clamps.



Old Vienna mending. Tiny holes were bored into the porcelain after which the breakage was glued and the pieces clinched together with wire clamps.

ULSTER COUNTY GAZETTE

Mr. Daniel J. Kelly Jr., of South Bend, Indiana, in his superb American Historical Newspapers collection lacked the rare Ulster County Gazette of January 4, 1800 which relates in vivid detail the death of George Washington on December 14, 1799, also his entombment.

We mentioned this fact in the description of his collection, April 1949 issue of The Spinning Wheel magazine.

Exciting collector's news came from Pennsylvania, from Mrs. George Washington Fletcher Jr., of West View, Pittsburgh, that her husband has had this relic issue of the Ulster County Gazette for a number of years.

From Fort Edward, New York, Mrs. Wallace Finne MacNaughton wrote announcing that she has the Jan. 4, 1800 Ulster County Gazette in perfect condition, it has been a prized item and kept in a folder and never shown except to a few historians.
